(1) Field of the Invention The present invention relates to the synthesis and recovery of an acid gas from a flue gas containing a gaseous mixture of carbon dioxide and hydrogen sulphide using an absorbent solution of a reduced sulphuric acid. The invention also relates to a method of sulphur recovery from industrial waste gases. (2) Description of the Prior Art The synthesis and recovery of acid gas from flue gas is a well known technique and is in use in a wide variety of chemical processes including but not limited to, the manufacture of ammonia, the liquefaction of natural gas and the production of sulfuric acid. Sulphuric acid is widely used as a catalyst in the paper, leather and textile industries. It is a powerful catalyst for the oxidation of organic sulphides to disulphides. Sulfides constitute a large amount of the waste produced in such chemical plants. Acid is produced by the oxidation of the sulphides by sulphur dioxide. In a typical sulphur recovery process, a flue gas containing H_2S , CO_2 and a small amount of SO_2 is oxidized with a suitable oxidizing agent, such as air, to yield H_2SO_4 . The resulting H_2SO_4 is then recovered from the gas by contacting with water. The H_2SO_4 solution is separated from the H_2S and CO_2 by simple absorption with lime or lime water. The CO_2 is oxidized to carbon dioxide with air. The resulting solution is then pumped to a sulphuric acid generating facility, where its H_2SO_4 is regenerated into sulphuric acid. Sulphuric acid can also be produced by the sulphur recovery from the Claus process, where a gaseous mixture of H_2S and CO_2 is reformed into sulphur and carbon oxides using a catalyst. The chemical industry has made enormous advances in the chemical refining and separation processes over the years. For example, the electrolytic refining of copper resulted in the development of the Hall-Hubner Cell for chlorine recovery, the Electrolytic Lead Reduction plant for electrochemical purification of lead, and the Fluorination plant for the recovery of fluorides. However, in spite of the improvements in efficiency,

Q: JQuery Cycle Plugin with delayed slideshow I have a jquery cycle plugin in a project I am working on that cycles through a slideshow of images. When you switch through these images they "reveal" themselves. I want each image to go through the transition in 1 second increments and then when it is done, the next image changes. I am using the plugin that cycles through the images and I can get it to work with the "current image" setting to 1 so that it always starts with the first image. How do I extend this to cycle through the entire slideshow in 1 second increments and then when it is done cycle through the next image? Here is a bit of the html: And here is the javascript:
`jQuery(document).ready(function(){ jQuery("#slideshow").cycle({ fx: 'fade', speed: 'fast', timeout: 3000, random: true, pause: true }); });`
A: I believe the timeout property does that - it allows you to specify how long each slide should be displayed before looping through to the next slide: jsfiddle
`$("#slideshow").cycle({ fx: 'fade', speed: 'fast', timeout: 3000, random: true, pause: true });`
You can set the interval to 1 second by using the speed setting as follows: jsfiddle Cannabis Testing 101: What are the Concerns? Cannabis Testing 101: What are the Concerns? Cannabis testing is important for many reasons
